

Private Public Partnerships for Capacity Building

Sirkka Korpela, UNDP

MMSD Workshop, London, 17 August 2001

Proposition:

Public Private Partnerships will be the development paradigm for the foreseeable future

“Our size gives us no option to ignore any of the problems of the world”

Rodney Chase, BP

Understanding Sustainability

- Environmental dimension
- Social and economic dimensions
- Governance dimension:
 - policies
 - capacities
 - structures
 - roles
 - partnerships

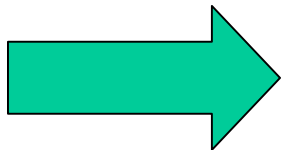

Understanding Globalization

- Economic Globalization is a fact, not a choice, but:
- Governance for Globalization poses new demands:
 - policy choices
 - structure choices
 - capacity needs
 - redefinition of roles
 - new ways of working together: partnerships

Why are Public-Private Partnerships Important?

- Growing interdependency and complexity - development requires inputs and action by multiple actors
- Global economy / global awareness: stakeholder groups
- Shared responsibility, new roles, not governments getting off the hook
- A stable political, economic and social environment = a good investment and business environment

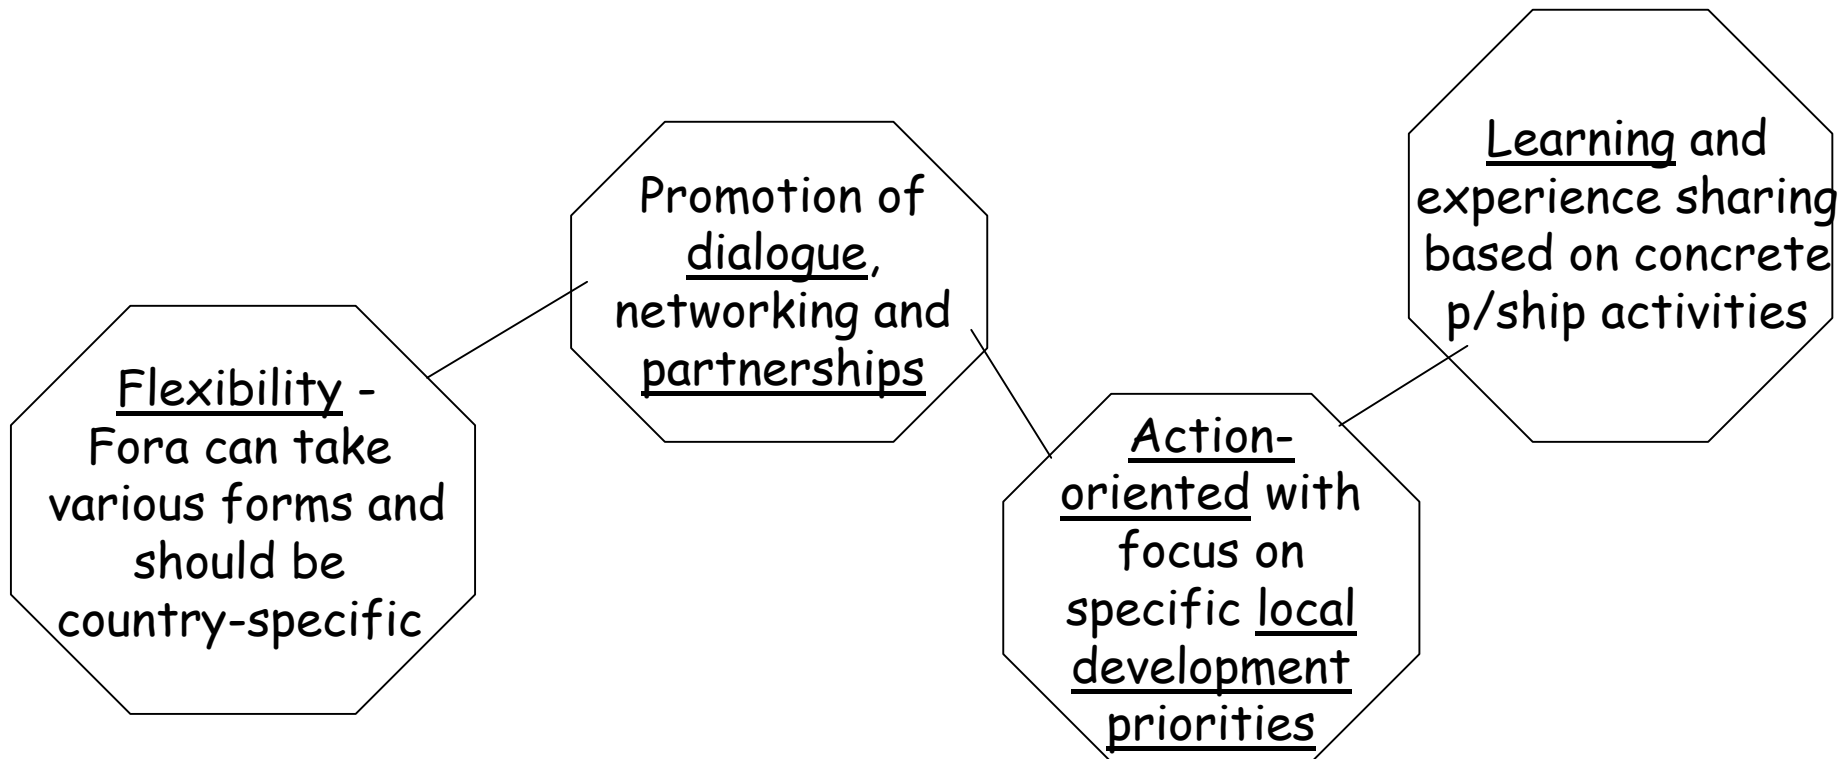

The Business Case

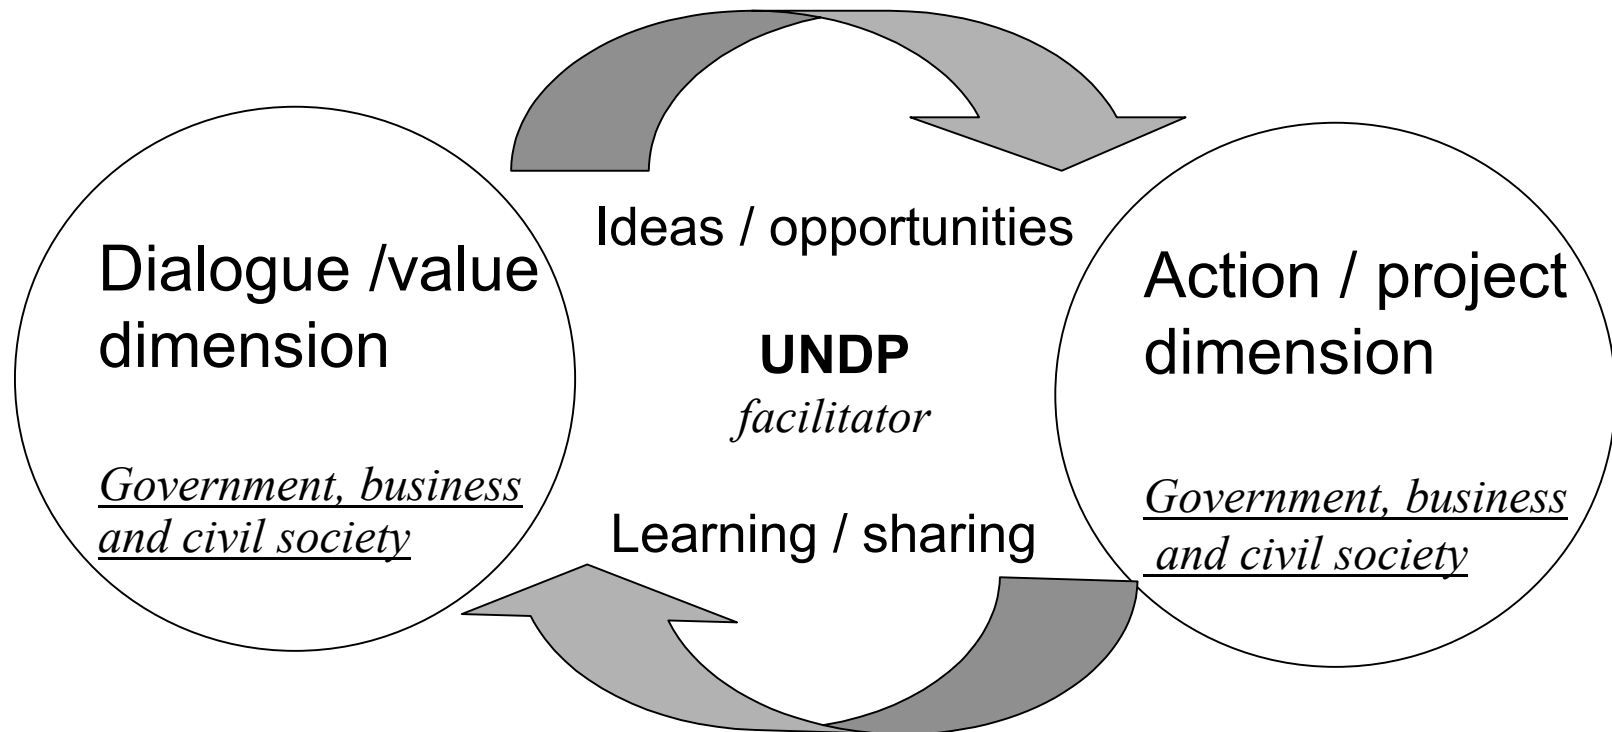

Basis for Partnerships

- Understanding of situation/problems (map)
- Understanding of alternatives (route)
 - Dialogue
- Shared objectives (stake in the solution)
 - Partnerships
- Roles/contributions: not only money, but different resources (skills, expertise, management, creativity, etc)

UNDP Role: Facilitator and Bridge Builder for Dialogue and Partnerships The Global Compact

Partnership Forum Approach

Venezuela: Training Judges in Human Rights

- Statoil
- Amnesty International
- UNDP
- Tribunal of Supreme Court

 Building governance capacities at Judiciary (national and local level)

China: Training CEOs in Clean Development

- Chinese Business Association (CEC)
 - Multinational Companies
 - Chinese Business Schools
 - WBCSD
 - UNDP
- Building capacities of local SMEs`

Other examples

- Kazakhstan: Micro credit and SME Service Centre (Citigroup and Chevron)
- Mongolia: dialogue on new economic framework
- Vietnam: dialogue on new enterprise law